Pathway Development

Our clinical editors are making great progress in finalizing draft pathways for their lead regions. To achieve the goal of localizing 30-50 pathways by June, the three OHTs have allocated the initial pathways development work among their respective regions. Later this month, each OHT will present the finalized pathways to the others as part of the Pathways Sharing process, ensuring a truly collaborative effort across the three regions.

To ensure these pathways are clear, concise, and effective for point-of-care engagement, they are undergoing a thorough review by Streamliners' technical writing team. In addition, local subject matter experts are carefully reviewing each pathway to ensure accuracy and relevance.

Stay tuned for more updates as we approach this exciting milestone!

Subject Matter Expert Involvement

Involving subject matter experts (SMEs) in the HealthPathways development process is crucial to ensuring each pathway align with local health care practices, improve care integration, and include accurate and practical clinical guidance. The SMEs engaged this far include a wide range of providers including community specialists, hospitalists, pharmacists, and various allied health professionals have been consulted for the first batch of pathways.

Each pathway is developed, shared, refined, and adapted based on the feedback of local SMEs. These SMEs provide essential insights that help shape these pathways, ensuring they are not only evidence-based but also tailored to the unique needs of the community they serve.

Additionally, collaborating with primary care providers and SMEs will improve integrated care. The involvement of SMEs helps to ensure that the pathways are reflective of not only primary care practices, but of the other providers who are essential to the patient's care journey. This will improve care integration across different healthcare sectors.

By integrating SME feedback, we can enhance the pathways' relevance and usability, ultimately supporting better decision-making and improved patient outcomes. Our SMEs will ensure resources remain relevant, care is escalated at an appropriate time, and benefit not only you as a health professional, but your patients as well in creating better health outcomes. A win-win scenario.
